As spring arrives and summer approaches, vacationers with motorhomes begin their annual migration towards the beach. A major challenge for them is finding a good place in a parking area located, preferably, as close to the coast as possible. Once the location is found, vacation life can begin.

In this documentary photographic series, the focus is on a double relationship: on the one hand, the holidaymakers and the coastal landscape, and, on the other hand, the relationship maintained with parking areas. Attention is then directed to the spaces themselves, which are temporarily appropriated, and vitally linked to leisure activities and holiday dreams.
